

Aspirin Desensitization for Aspirin Hypersensitivity

Description

Aspirin desensitization for aspirin hypersensitivity is a treatment for individuals with severe reactions to non-steroidal anti-inflammatory drugs (NSAIDS), such as aspirin, who need long-term NSAID administration due to a medical condition.

Very small doses of aspirin are given over several hours, with many people experiencing some form of allergic reaction during this time. The allergic reaction is treated, and the person continues on the desensitization protocol.

The process is repeated until the person can tolerate a full dose of aspirin. Desensitization is only maintained if aspirin is taken daily. Once stopped, the allergy returns.
